I. The English appellative Words and Forms of Expression before the Latin; in which will be found some thousand English Words and Phrases, several various Senses of the same Word, and a great Number of proverbial Expressions, more than in any former DICTIONARY of this Kind, all carefully endeavoured to be rendered in proper and classical Latin.

To which are subjoined,

1. The PROPER NAMES of the more remarkable Places rendered into Latin.
2. The CHRISTIAN NAMES of Men and Women.

II. The Latin Appellatives before the English; in which are given the more certain Etymologies of the Latin Words, their various Senses in English ranged in their natural Order, the principal Idioms under each Sense explained and accounted for, all supported by the best Authorities of the Roman Writers; with References to the particular Book, Chapter, or Verse, where the Citations may be found.

III. The ancient Latin Names of the more remarkable Persons and Places occurring in classic Authors, with a short Account of them both historical and mythological; and the more modern Names of the same Places, so far as they are known, collected from the most approved Writers.

To which are added,

1. The ROMAN CALENDAR, much fuller than any yet published.
2. Their Coins, Weights, and Measures.
3. A Chronology of the Roman Kings, Consuls, and more remarkable Events of that State.
4. The Notes of Abbreviation used in ancient Latin Authors and Inscriptions.
5. A short Dictionary of the more common Latin Words occurring in our ancient Laws.
6. A general Chronology of eminent Persons and memorable Things.

Vocabulorum Latinorum NOTATIONES

Variaſque SIGNIFICATIONES

Iuſto ordine tradens,

Allatiſque EXEMPLIS è clafficis ſcriptoribus

Singulas confirmans.

A a, Roman, A a, Italian, both of mo general uſe in writing the European languages; A a, English Saxon; ꝺ a, English black letter, nearly, as the reſt, reſembling that of the German alphabet; A α, Greek, called alpha, from the Hebrew א aleph, whh, as all the letters in the Hebrew tongue are ſignificant, denotes either an ox, or a leader, marks of excellen and priority. The firſt place is deſervedly given to this letter on account of its ſimplicity, being little more than an opening of the mouth; and its ſound, as a vowel (for it is properly a radical conſonant, as well as all the reſt is determined by the adjunct vowel, if it have any, if not, it is ſilent, and hath no ſound. From this uſe of the Hebrew the later Greeks ſeem to have taken their note of an eaſy breathing, which they prefixed to all words begining with a tender ſound, as in ἀνὰ, ἐπὶ, &c. to diſtinguiſh them from thoſe which begin with an aspirate; as in ἄνα, ἐνάς. This is done after they had diveſted the eighth letter H of the conſonant power which it held in their ancient alphabet conformably to the Hebrew, to make uſe of its figure in denoting the long power of the vowel E. But the Latins followe them not herein, having formed their language from the ancient Æolians and Ionians, who had only the Cadme alphabet of ſixteen letters. But to proceed, the Latin and English A hath the ſame power and figure as the Grek; but its name, as well as the reſt of the letters, from the ſimple ſound a, bé, cé, &c. In English we have a threeſd ſound of this vowel; ſhort, as in bat, cat, &c. like the Hebrew pathabb; long, as in dâte, fâte, &c. mixed with, obſcure, as in call, fall, where we hear the ſame ſound as in olive, hollo-w, only that in the former it is long, conformably to the Hebrew τ kametz, but in the latter ſhort, conformably to τ: chateph kametz. It is greatly to be wiſhed that we had more letters expreſſive of vocal ſounds; or marks to thoſe we have, to aſcertain their power in the ſame ſyllable; as in fallow, falling; or in thoſe which are analogous, as in coſt, moſt, &c. The want of theſe equally affects our Latin pronunciation; for we pronounce mālus and mālus, pāter and māter with the ſame ſound, whh we can ſcarcely think the Latins did. We are indeed more ſecure in the Greek tongue, becauſe directed by the vowels, and the uſe of accents. But to return, A, before e, and u, in the ſame ſyllable, make two diphthongs, and au, the former of which in Latin is ſubſtituted both for ai the proper, and æ the improper diphthong of the Greks, as in Ἀνείας, Æneas, τῇ σφαίρῃ, ſpheræ; and, on the contrary, the ancient Latins in their own words, when they had occaſion to divide their æ, changed it into the Greek ai; as in aulai, pietai, frugeferai. Some make ai a Latin diphthong, as in aio, Caius; but in ais, and ait, i manifeſtly belongs to the latter ſyllable, and the Greeks write not Γαῖος, Ἰταῖος; whence it ſeems to be very manifeſt that ai in the Latin tongue is not a diphthong, as in the Greek. As there is mutual intercourſe between all the vowels with each other, ſo in this a is changed into e; as in laeto, deleto, ago, egi; e into a, as in decem, decanus, arveo, avarus; a into i, as in apiſcor, adi-piſcor; i into a, as reiſſa, reapſe; a into o, as in ſparta, ſum, taxus, toxicum; o into a, as in forveo, favilla, volvō, valvæ, a into u, as in camera, cumera, taberna, contubernium; and u into a, as in glubo, glaber, μυδαῖω, madeo. In the Roman comitia, or aſſemblies for the making of laws, the people had two tables: in the one were two letters, U. R. uti rogat, ſignifying nifying their assent; because a motion for a new law was called rogatio: in the other this letter A. i. e. antiquo, or antiqua probo, to shew their dissent. In capital causes they had also two tables covered with wax, in one of which was this letter A. i. e. absolvo; in the other C. for condemno; whence the former is by Tully, pro Milone, called salutaris, the latter tristis. In numerals it denoted anciently 500, and \bar{A} 5000. Other uses of this, and the rest of the letters, in the compendious notes of the ancients, are too many to be enumerated here; I have therefore under this, as well as the following letters, explained those which most frequently occur, referring the explanation of the rest to a more general collection thereof out of Sextorius Ursatus, and others, which may be of use, sometimes, even to the learned themselves, in reading ancient inscriptions found upon Roman monuments and coins. A. Absolvo, absolutio, aiunt, aliquando, ager, albo, annus, anni, annos, annis, argentum, Augustus, Augusta, Augustalis; A. A. Auro argento; A. A. A. F. a, Lat. ab A, a Græc. Nam formas literarum veteres Græcas penè easdem fuisse, quæ suo tempore fuerunt Latinæ, testatur Plinius 7, 58. Hanc vocalem ut insuavissimam notat Cicero in Orat. 49, quod tamen de crebrâ ejus repetitione accipendum; nam in eâ sæpius iteratâ asperitatem notavit etiam Martianus Capella. Sæpe quidem in alias atque alias vocales mutatur, tam longas, quàm correptas, aliquando fortè suavioris soni causâ; sed cum hoc commune habeat cum reliquis vocalibus, imò & consonis, nihil hinc à primæ literæ dignitate abscedere videtur.

A, a Preposition of the same signification, made from, and for the better sound used before consonants instead of

* Ab (ex ἀπό, quæ, recisâ δ, & tenui in suam mediam conversâ, emergit ab) a prep. governing an ablative case.

It is used always before vowels, and frequently, especially by Livy and Cæsar, before all consonants, if v, x, and z, be not excepted.

It has a great variety of significations. (1) From. (2) By, after a verb active, passive, or neuter, denoting the efficient cause. (3) By reason of. (4) After, next. (5) At. (6) In. (7) The term from. (8) For that reason. (9) Out of. (10) From [ever since]. (11) Against. (12) For [as to, in respect to]. (13) After, from the time that, or next to. (14) For, on our side, or party. (15) On. (16) With. (17) In comparison of. (18) As far as from, or hard by. (19) Towards an object. (20) The moving cause, for out of, by reason of. (21) The part affected. (22) A relation to the subject, as to, as for. (1) Senectus abstracta à rebus gerendis, Cic. de Sen. 5. (2) Laudatur ab his, culpatur ab illis, Hor. Sat. 1, 2, 11. Mars communis sæpe spoliantem & exultantem evertit, & perculit ab abjecto, Cic. Mil. 21. Caput à sole dolet, Plin. 24, 5. Cum Marcellus perfit ab Hannibale, Id. 11, 37.

But the ablative after verbs passive doth not always denote the efficient cause, but sometimes the term from whom, or what; as, A me diligentia expectatur, Cic. My diligence is expected, or diligence is expected from [not by] me.

(3) Scipio avidior erat certaminis à spe, quam successus rerum augebat, Liv. (4) Alter ab illo, Virg. Ecl. 5, 49. (5) Omnia ego isthæc auscultavi ab ostio, Plaut. Merc. 2, 4, 9. (6) Stare à mendacio, Id. (7) A labore ad libidinem, Ter. Andr. 1, 1, 50. (8) Id ab re interregnum appellatur, Liv. 1, 17. (9) A Germaniâ reversus, Id. (10) A puero, Cic. (11) Defendo à frigore myrtos, Virg. Ecl. 7, 6. (12) A me pudica est, Plaut. Curc. 1, 1, 51. (13) Scipionis classis quadragesimo die à securi navigavit, Plin. 16, 39. from the time it was cut down by the ax. (14) A me stat. A nobis facit. Dico ab reo, Cic. (15) A parte aquilonis, Plin. 13, 25. (16) A potu prandium incipiunt, Id. (17) Ab illo friget, Gell. (18) Flavius supplementum ab Româ abduxerat, Liv. (19) Ab innocentia clementissimus, Cic. (20) Ab amore scribo, Balbus Cic. (21) Doleo ab oculis, Plaut. Cist. 1, 1, 62. Ab animo perit, Plin. (22) Inviectus à labore, Cic. Off. 1, 20.

More particular uses.

A, or Ab is elegantly used before a person to signify his house, or some other adjunct. Ab se Egreditur foras, Plaut. from his own house. Aqua à fabro ferrario post cibum data, Cels. from the smith's forge.

A, or ab after the Verbs do, solvo, numero, represento, lego, &c. indicates the person by whose hands, as, Dabo tibi ab trapecitâ viaticum, Plaut. out of the banker's hands. Frater laborat ut tibi ab Egnatio solvat, Cic. by his bonds. A me numerabo, representabo, Id. out of my own pocket. A me hoc illi dices, Cic. you shall tell him from me. A matre illius venio, Plaut. Mil. 4, 7, 16. I come on account of her mother, or in her mother's name. Sanus ab aliquo, Hor. Sat. 1, 4, 129. one that is made wise by the misfortunes of another.

This preposition is elegantly used as a circumlocution of an adj. or a gen. case; as, A nobis crepuere fores, Ter. i. e. nostræ, our doors. Pastor ab Amphryso, i. e. Amphrysus, the Amphrysian shepherd. Illa ab illo, [sc. illius] animadvertenda injuria est, Ter. this undutiful carriage of his.

This observation seems in some measure to explain the ellipsis in these following forms, and many more of the like kind;

Ab actis, a publick notary,
A cubiculis, a chamberlain,
A manu, a clerk, or secretary,
A pedibus, a footman,
A rationibus, an accountant,
A studiis, a director of one's studies.

For by adding minister, servus, libertus, or some such word (relations being frequently suppressed) it is minister à manu, servus à cubiculis, &c. which, according to the said observation, being turned into an adjective, or a gen. case, will be minister amanuensis, or manûs; servus cubicularis, or cubiculi.

It is sometimes used before words not casual; as, A pridie Idûs Septembris, from the 12th.

It seems sometimes redundant; as, A metu infamie, Tac. for fear of: Sometimes deficient, Modo pecorum barbaris trahebatur, Id. by the barbarians.

* Abs, of, or from. This preposition, as Cicero acquaints us, was rarely used in his time, except in books of accounts, and not in all neither. It stands alone before no letters but q and t; as, abs quivis: abs te, Ter. In composition also before c, as, abscedo, abscondo.

A memorial dislich for the use of à or ab in composition,

Ab (1) remover, (2) privat, (3) permutat,
(4) separat, (5) auget.
(4) Abscindens (1) abigens, (3) abolescens,
(5) abnegat, (2) amens.

A in composition is only used before m and r: Ab before vowels, and d, f, h, j, l, n, r, s. Before g only in abgreco, and p in † abpatruus. In aufero and aufugio, ab is changed into au, Cic. in Oratore 47.

* Abactor, ôris. m. verb. A scaler, or driver away of cattle. Meum verò Bellerophonem, abactorem indubitatum, cruentumque percussorem criminantes, at casas interim suas victum perducunt, Apul. Met. 7. p. 228.

* Abactus, a, um. part. [ex abigor] Driven away, (1) by force, (2) by stealth, (3) or otherwise. (4) † Forced to leave. (5) Fig. passed over. (1) Greges nobilissimarum equarum abactæ, Cic. B. The second letter, but first consonant in the alphabet, is a labial, and pronounced by shutting the lips, which A had opened. Among the Mutes it hath a middle Place, and Power, between the smooth and easy Sound of P, and the aspirate and rougher Sound of Ph, F, and V, every one of which in the Derivation and Inflection of Words, is frequently, for the better Sound, changed into some of the other; so from βόσκω comes pasco, from ἀπό ab, from labor, lapsus; from scribo, scripsi: thus b, always continuing in the Inflection of such Words before a Vowel; but, because it would otherwise be too hard, before a consonant it is softened into p: thus from rubeo comes rufus; from δίαμβος, triumphus; would otherwise be too hard, before a consonant it is softened into p: thus from rubeo comes rufus; from δίαμβος, triumphus; from βάλανος, balæna; from βέβηω, fremo; from γίλβος, gilvus; from βρύς, avus. Yea, in some Latin Words, b and v are indifferently written; as sebum and sebum; so also b and p; as Publicola and Poplicola; and b and f, as bubalus and bufalus. B is sometimes inserted in the middle of Words for the better Sound, as in ambages, ambio, amburo, &c. is servile in the Inflection of the Dative and Ablative Plural of the Third, Fourth, and Fifth Declensions of Latin Nouns; as likewise in those of the Preterimperfect, and Future Tenses; as also in the First and Second Conjugations.

B. The second letter, but first consonant in the alphabet; is a labial, and pronounced by shutting the lips, which A had opened. Among the Mutes it hath a middle Place, and Power, between the smooth and easy Sound of P, and the aspirate and rougher Sound of Ph, F, and V, every one of which in the Derivation and Inflection of Words, is frequently, for the better Sound, changed into some of the other; so from βόσκω comes pasco, from ἀπὸ ab, from labor, lapsus; from scribo, scripsi: thus b, always continuing in the Inflection of such Words before a Vowel; but, because it would otherwise be too hard, before a consonant it is softened into p: thus from rubeo comes rufus; from θρίαμβος, triumphus; from φάλαγγα, balæna; from ἐρέω, fremio; from γίλβος, gilvus; from ἄνυς, ayus. Yea, in some Latin Words, b and v are indifferently written; as sebum and seuum; so also b and p; as Publicola and Poplicola; and b and f, as bubalus and bufalus. B is sometimes inserted in the middle of Words for the better Sound, as in ambages, ambio, amburo, &c. is servile in the Inflection of the Dative and Ablative Plural of the Third, Fourth, and Fifth Declensions of Latin Nouns; as likewise in those of the Preterimperfect, and Future Tenses; as also in the First and Second Conjugations.

C. The third letter, but second consonant, may indeed be copied immediately from the Hebrew צ, being exactly the same, only in compliance to our way of writing, turning towards the right: yet is much more probably framed from the Greek Γ, its right and perpendicular line, for the more ease and quick dispatch in writing, instead of an angle, degenerating into a semicircle. For it is evident, that the Latin letters are many of them exactly the same with the Greek; and most of the rest, which are common to both tongues, differ no more, than haste, convenience of writing, or, perhaps, some novel, and growing depravation might probably occasion. And I may add also, That many words natives of Greece, were made denizens of Rome, without any formality of changing their garb, especially those of Dorick families: others again, in pretty near proportion between their number of words and letters, suffer some change, to be more civilly treated there: besides, it is notorious that the Roman youth were anciently taught both to read, and write their own language by Greek masters. This I judge proper to observe here once for all, and proceed. The rank which C holds in the Latin alphabet, answering that of Γ in the Greek, is a farther evidence of this extraction: besides, when the Greeks in their own letters express a pure Latin word, where this letter is found, they commonly substitute Γ, or Κ, for Cajus, writing Γαῖος, Καῖσαρ. Yea, in many Latin words c and g are indifferently written; as Cajus Cnæus, or Gajus Gnæus. But before I go farther, I must do a piece of justice to this letter, by declaring, that though it acknowledge the Greek Γ for its parent, yet it may challenge the same regard from the Latin letters g and k, and, in the opinion of some learned men, from q also: the first whereof was not known to the Romans, till after the first Punick war. This is plainly proved from the royal laws, where Acnom is writ for Agnūm, Acrom for Agrum; and that famous remaining piece of antiquity, the monumental pillar of Duilius, where we read Lecio pugnandod, exfoeiont, &c. for Legio pugnando effugiunt. As for K, it appears never to have been much used, and is now so obsolete, that it is not written in more than two or three Latin words, where c is always indifferently, or perhaps better, used. And for Q, the indifferency found in writing very many Latin words therewith, or with C, as cur, or quar; quum, or cūm; locutus, or loquutus, cotidie, or quotidie, hath induced many Criticks to deduce its original from c. But this shall be considered in its proper place. The name of C, if we attend to analogy, is always Kc, as is its sound before all vowels; and never Sè. And here, with much reluctance, I remark, That foreigners, who own we understand Latin perfectly, and write it correctly, account us little better than barbarians, in several parts of pronunciation; but in none more justly, than our depraved sound of this letter before æ, œ, e, i, and y, as if it were S; which at the same time our learned men confess to differ from the ancient usage of Greece, and Rome, to be unreasonable in itself, and to introduce a strange confusion in words and things; so that cædo, and sædo; cæpi, and sepi; census, and sensus; cicer, and sifer; cygni, and signi, and many thousands more, have with us, one and the same sound. Hence also it comes to pass, that its sound is entirely lost after f; so that cæna, and scena; celaris, and sceleris, and innumerable words of the same kind, are confounded. This I humbly leave to the consideration and redress of the learned school-masters of this kingdom, as very well deserving it, and return to its true sound; which is the same with that usurped by the exploded K, and stands related to the harder sound of g, as p to b; and therefore in the inflection of words g before a vowel, is changed into c before a consonant; as ago, actum, not agtum; lego, lectum, not legtum; just as scribo, scriptum. Neither ought it to be sounded with an aspirate, as the modern Italians do, who say chichindela, Chichero, &c. for cicindela, Cicero. Concerning its intercourse with f, and t, the tenuis of the third Class of Mutes, I rather choose to treat in the dissertation upon those letters, lest I should be thought too tedious in this.

Censor, ōris. m. verb. [à censeo] qui agebat censum tam de personis, quàm rebus, sic enim vett. Gloss. Censu ἀπογραφῇ, & ἐλας ἀποτίμησις. (1) He who executed the Census, which was first instituted by Servius Tullius, and managed as a part of his kingly office. In the consular state, the consuls themselves executed it, as a part of their business, till the year of the city 311.

when, by reason of the too great employment they had on their hands, the senate were willing, for divers political reasons, to ease them of this part of their burden, by creating two of these officers, Papirius and Sempronius; whose office being at that time only to take an account of the number of the people, and the value of their estates, and to assess them accordingly, it was looked upon as mean; but afterwards the succeeding censors, on the accession of more business, acquired so great authority, that even the emperours themselves exercised the office. They were to censure, and punish evil, and indecent manners, such as the law took no cognizance of, by degrading the senators, and knights, and disfranchising the commonalty. They had the care of publick buildings, bridges, and ways, as also of the making, and abrogating, certain laws, &c. (2) Met. It is also taken for a censor, critic, or other severe person. (1) Hor. * Cōmœdia, æ, f. [à κόμην, vicus, & ὀδὴ, cantus, quod initio vicis juvenes cantare soliti essent, antequam in urbes convenissent, Fest.] A comedy, or interlude. See the commendation, use, and end, of it in Donatus's preface to Terence; its definition in Scal. Poët. 1, 5. It is either old, or new. The old, whereof Eupolis, Cratinus, and Aristophanes, were masters, is described by Quint. 10, 1. and the excess of liberty, its great fault, by Cic. 4. De Repub. The new dif-fered from the old almost in every thing. In matter, manner, time, furniture, style, and verse. Their matter was almost as copious as that of Satyre; every action and person, even the greatest commanders and princes not being excepted, and herein more blame-worthy, be-cause it reflected on the good as well as bad. See Cicero in the place quoted. The new fetched its arguments from common life, as it did also its persons, who were generally young gentlemen in love, and their servants tricking their old masters to gratify their young ones. The old flourished about the time of the Peloponnesian war; the new when Greece had lost its liberty. The fur-niture of the old was very large, of the new, very small; the Chorus being entirely taken a-way. The style of the old was epick or satirical; of the new, mean, or low. The old admitted all kinds of verse, the new, the iambick only. The necessary parts of both are four, viz. the Prota-sis, the Epitasis, the Catastasis, and the Cata-strophe; which see in their places.
